He was a teacher from the Netherlands, but whilst travelling to Sweden saw the game of Ring Boll played. The ball had to be thrown through a 3m high ring on a pole. When back home, in Amsterdam, he put forward a variation of Ring Boll to be used as a mixed sport—where boys and girls could both play together on the same team. Korfball, as this new sport was known, instantly became a massive success. He had to stand up to many people who didn't believe it was right to have a mixed sport, but in spite of this Korfball is played widely today.
